

SPEED FRIENDING

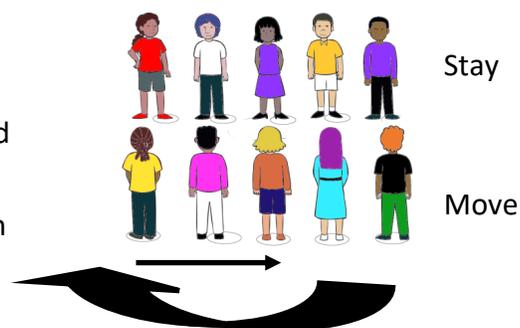

Speed friending is a great way to learn more about each other, and give short, structured topics to share information about personal favourites, hobbies and interests.

Set-Up:

Have your group stand in two lines, facing one another (or seated across from each other). Each participant should face another person; if you find your group has one extra person, have a facilitator step in to create even numbers.

Ask a question, and allow each person in the facing pair to answer. After each question, one line will move one person to the right, and the other will stay put. The person on the end will circle around to the other end of their own line. This way, the pairs will change with each question, and each person will speak to a new partner.

• Questions (and add your own!)
